Southeast News.

From the newspaper reports it is learned that the wheat crop in the southeastern counties has made considerable improvement the last week or two, and the prospects for a crop are much more hopeful.

Fredericktown Democrat-News.

D. B. Cloninger on Monday of this week killed a large wolf near his home in the southern part of the county. The animal was one of the largest recently seen. It is said there are several wolves on Big Creek and some depredation has been charged against them.

Illmo Jimpfleute.

A deed was recorded last week conveying to the Illinois Central railroad 100 acres of land near Illmo. The deed was signed by Louis Houck. The Jimp was also shown some information from what is considered a reliable source which read: Description, round house, location, Illmo, Mo., contractor, W. Baldwin; for whom, Illinois Central railroad, dated Chicago, Ill., February 10, 1917.

Illmo Jimpfleute.

The Illmo drug store, Stanley Holtenbeck proprietor, was closed Saturday evening by Sheriff Sneed on a transcript execution in favor of a St. Louis drug concern and the First State Bank of Illmo. The notices nowhere state the amount of the judgment of the St. Louis concern. The judgments held by the bank amount to $918.02. The stock and fixtures will be sold in March, the sale being subject to a chattel mortgage for $300.

Ironton Register.

Last Friday the brick walls of the burned Arcadia College building were thrown down. The old structure had been strongly built, and the exterior walls remained, a menace to the passer-by. The cornerstone, laid in 1870, was uncovered and its contents were found intact and perfect as though placed there the day before. The stain of time had not touched them. Among the contents were: A bible, a "List of the Officers and Students of Arcadia High School, 1868-70," photographs of Rev. J. C. Berryman and wife, Rev. L. M. Lewis, the then president of the school, and of the building and grounds; the "Constitution of the Alumni of Arcadia High School," "History of the Organization of the County of Iron," a copy of the Iron County Register of June 30, 1870; "Charter, Ordinances, and Names of Present Officers" of the city of Ironton, and photographs by Mr. J. W. Wilkinson of the "Top of Pilot Knob as seen from the northwest in 1870." They recall more than one half-forgotten name and incident and will be carefully preserved.

Manufacturing a Machine

From the State Capitol

A deep, double-dyed purple plot on the part of the democratic state committee, the administration and many members of the general assembly to construct a powerful political machine is in full progress, and will succeed, unless the republican lookouts are able to appropriate the machine and manipulate the monkey wrench. It is a true time to tell the tale. The independent papers are invited to publish these statements, the democratic ones are dared to do so, and the republican ones are requested to refrain from so doing. Piles and piles of political machines mark the trail of man, machine monuments to his malignities. They have been constructed at an immense outlay of cunning, chicanery and coin, but none have endured beyond a comparatively few campaigns. Consider those of the season passed. One became covered with cinder berries that bored their way into the boiler, there was an explosion of steam that cooked the engineer, the High-Diddle-Dee of the river of Doubt. In another machine corruption commenced in the center and crept through the outer shell, the collapse caught the conspirators. Dickey Bird was twigg'd by his own line—the Judge was jimmed by Howe-Stuffel and they were caught in the cogs of their chuck-a-luck game. Political machines have toppled from being top-heavy; they have gone into the receivers' hands because the conductors knocked down, they have been wrecked because of the complexity of orders, some were stopped because they exceeded the speed limit, others never got up steam. One thousand and one reasons, and then some, can be deducted as to why political engines have been destroyed. In the face of all these frigid facts the present plotters are proceeding, cock-sure they have a system that cannot fail. Their plans and specifications call for a hospice for all the country's wronged; a highway on which all the weary can ride in the auto of democracy; Pierian springs by the roadside and Bodhi trees, where those who wish may sit and think; the road will
